ZOGBY & TUTORVISTA EXPOSE TRUTH ABOUT EDUCATION & TUTORING

99 percent of Americans say Government does not provide sufficient access to tutoring

San Francisco– May 22, 2007 – TutorVista, a leading online tutoring and test preparation provider, today announced the results of a nationwide survey conducted by Zogby International, which revealed that an overwhelming 75 percent of American believe tutoring can help all students and only 1 percent think that Government provides easily accessible government tutoring.

While 22 percent of American adults cite cost as prohibitive to their own child receiving tutoring, two in five (39 percent) cited reasons other than cost. And 92 percent believe that tutoring programs offered by public schools are insufficient in meeting a student’s academic needs.

94 percent of Democrats, compared with 74 percent of Republicans, say educational reform policies will be somewhat or very important in consideration of the 2008 presidential candidates. Intriguingly, 82 percent of people without kids under 17 said that education will be important in consideration of 2008 presidential candidates while only 80 percent of people who had children said the same.

“This survey illustrates that Americans believe that students benefit from outside help in our increasingly competitive world,” explained John Stuppy, TutorVista’s President. “71 percent of those surveyed said that one-on-one tutoring is more beneficial than group sessions, and around half (47 percent) believe that tutoring is too expensive. We are pleased to provide a special service that is cost-effective, accessible, and individualized to students across the country.”

Zogby surveyed a representative sample of 6,442 adults between May 4 and May 7, 2007; the survey has a margin of error +/- 1.2 percent. For the complete results, and to speak with TutorVista officials, contact Susan Engel at vista@RLMpr.com.
