U.S. EXPERIENCING NATIONWIDE EDUCATION CRISIS, TUTORVISTA.COM'S PRESIDENT SAYS

– Addresses Harvard Business School's Social Enterprise Conference –

Columbia, MD – March 3, 2008 – TutorVista.com, the preeminent online tutoring company, presented at yesterday's Harvard Business School's Social Enterprise Conference, held on the Harvard Business School campus in Boston, Massachusetts.

Dr. John Stuppy, TutorVista.com's President, was one of four panelists on the Innovative K-12 Education Solutions Panel. Among other things, the panelists discussed why there is a need for innovative solutions in K-12 education, and the ultimate solution for the issues facing K-12 education.

"We are currently experiencing a nationwide education crisis," said Dr. John Stuppy. "Students are underserved in the classroom, where the majority of students are either ahead of or behind the current teaching level. The students need personalized, one-on-one attention to improve core skills and the freedom to work at their own pace. At TutorVista.com, we believe that technology and a new global teaching force is a way of leveling the playing field and making education affordable and accessible to students everywhere."

The Harvard Business School's Social Enterprise Conference sought to promote the perspective that business success and concern for broader social issues are compatible. The theme of this year's conference was "IMAGINE", and the panels, keynotes, business plan competition and other events challenged participants to create change and impact by pushing the boundaries of conventional thinking.
